

I support net neutrality. Taking away the freedom of the internet is not merely an inconvenience for the millions of casual internet users; it is a death sentence for startup internet companies, a removal of communication for people who can't afford to pay extra for internet, and a damper on the freedom of expression for millions of artists, writers, businessmen, celebrities, videomakers, photographers, and freelancers who use the internet as an outlet for their creative minds and a way of getting by.

Don't give in to the wishes of greedy corporate internet providers. This will benefit only them — not other companies or the general American populace.

Net neutrality is a necessity.